The owner stated that they keep the chicken in the flip-top unit only during service and cold-hold overnight in the refrigeration unit in the back room. Owner also stated that they had contacted the company that services the equipment and that they would be on site the day following the inspection to make any necessary repairs. Recommended that operator work in small sized batches and monitor the temperature closely so that potentially hazardous food items do not exceed 45°F during cold-holding. #13B&14B- Garbage, refuse, and returnables observed in the space adjacent to the main facility have been mostly discarded. observed|Part 2: One violation observed|Comments: |Cited cooler is not functioning correctly so it's being used with an ice bath. Operator does not have a sufficient quantity of ice to effectively cool the temperature controlled items -- the level of food items being kept cold should match the level of ice water. Items above the level of ice water will not be cooled effectively. Inspector also showed manager on duty the area of range hood where grease is running down from an upper portion of the hood. The area has been cleaned since the last inspection, but grease is still running down the side from an upper portion of the hood. For the hand wash sink, operator should provide soap at the sink so staff may wash hands as required.||Board of Health Action to follow.

Inspection Part 1: No critical violations observed|Part 2: No violations observed|Comment: In pantry area, there's a leak in the ceiling and some of the ceiling panels have been removed. Inspector did not see any sign of food items being directly affected at this time. Inspector explained to operator that this area should be monitored for vermin and other pests by a licensed pest controller to prevent any contamination by vermin of stored food items and food service equipment. With the ceiling panels removed, it's easier for vermin to enter
