

Benefits: Community Health Indicator Reports (CHIRS) Indicators –Trends

Benefits:

- New York State Community Health Indicator Reports (CHIRS) were developed in 2012, and are updated annually to interested parties, including state and local health partners and the general public. Data are provided for the state, counties, New York City and Rest of State, for almost 300 health indicators that are organized by 15 different health topics.
- Interested parties can utilize the data to assess and identify local priorities, to set reasonable local level targets, and to monitor progress.
